Did you find a mistake?

The R-Ladies way!

27 Jan 2017

4 months ago I handed my notice in one of the boldest moves in my entire career. Not that I visualized myself as a the-rest-of-your-life kind of girl (at all), but I've always been very cautious, thinking a couple of moves ahead. About was in a very nice and stable position at Equifax as an Analytics Consultant, mostly building bespoke Credit Score Models. I was feeling that I needed to make a change started growing on me: I was not challenged enough and I wasn't finding motivation myself. I had to move on. I started my quest for a job, but Uruguay (where I live) is a really small country. Science positions are not that common, so the few thing that came out didn't lead anywhere. I decided I had to quit if I could find my joy again and continue my journey to become a Data Scientist. And I did it.

Faces of #rstats Twitter

19 Mar 2017

This week I was impressed by this tweet where Daniel Pett, Digital Humanities Lead at the British Museum, presented a collage of Twitter profile pics of all his colleagues. He made this piece of art using R (for collecting the usernames) and Python. I'm a bit of an R fanatic (or a Python dummy..) so I decided to write a code in R only to make a collage of profile pics of Twitter #rstats users.
